Call for Papers of the EAEPE Research Area J on

“Monetary Economics, Finance and Financial Institutions”

This research area provides a pluralistic and interdisciplinary forum for the analysis of financial markets and their role in economy, culture and society. With respect to the general theme of the 30th EAEPE Annual conference, this research area wants to address to problem of how critical research in Monetary Economics, Finance and Financial Institutions is put into practice. 10 years after the Great Financial Crisis, it is not only time to evaluate established policies meant to stabilize the international financial architecture but also to think about new tools and instruments which are to affect the financial system for the better. Thus, we want to explore (but by no means limit ourselves to) the following topics of policy change:

New drivers of systemic risk

- How does financial innovation impact on the governance of the financial system?
- What are the implications of newly emerged regulatory concepts since the Great Financial Crisis such as macro-prudential regulation?
- How do regulatory concepts not only address but also generate systemic vulnerabilities?

New strategies for transnational arbitrage

- What kind of strategies do financial institutions use to interact across borders?
- How do national reforms affect the international financial architecture?
- How do international regulatory frameworks affect national jurisdictions differently?

New technologies of financial governance

- How do financial institutions make use of technological innovations?
- How do new technologies affect the regulatory tool box and the financial system?
- How does technological innovation change the methods for analysing the financial system?

We welcome submissions of individual papers or panels. Panel submissions are thought to contain 4 to 5 contributions, chair and discussant. Paper abstracts (300-750 words) should include the name(s), email address, affiliation of the authors, along with the name and code of this Research Area. Submissions should be handed in via the EAEPE website (<http://eaepe.org>).

Abstract submission deadline is March 31, 2018. Notification of acceptance will be sent out on April 30, 2018. Submission for Special Session Proposals closes on February 15, 2018. For questions please write to the coordinators of this Research Area: Benjamin Wilhelm (benjamin.wilhelm@uni-erfurt.de) or Ian Crowther (ian.crowther@mbs.ac.uk).
